Everyone's responsible to uphold dignity of National

Teachers, lecturers, educators and parents alike will have to play their exemplary roles in upholding the dignity of the language among the younger generations in the country today.

The prominence of the Malay Language as the country's National Language is sanctified by Article 152 of the Constitution of Malaysia, the independence from British colonization of the Federation of Malaya on August 31, 1957, and the formation of Malaysia on September 16, 1963.

According to the highly regarded Malay Language expert, Professor Emeritus Datuk Dr. Nik Safiah Karim, a citizen should include having a good command of the national language, and mastering of the global languages, English, Chinese and Indian, and third and fourth other widely-spoken languages.

Speaking at a scholarly serial talks organized by Universiti Malaysia Pahang (UMP) recently, Professor Emeritus Datuk Dr. Nik Safiah Karim said that the Malay language is the flagship symbol of a nation's sovereignty and the identity of her citizen, whilst English is the language of the outside world, as well as the fundamental language to access knowledge and pursuit of life-long education.

"On that note, aside from taking pride in loving and mastering the national language, as Malaysians, we should also learn English and master it, while simultaneously upholding the national language as the key to our national unity," she said.

The existing pluralism of ethnicity, religion and culture has shaped the characteristics of Malaysia population. This has created a unique challenge in building national identity and sustainable unity – but fortunately, Professor Emeritus Datuk Dr. Nik Safiah Karim said that the promotion of the Malay language became its means to universally-unparalleled union.

"The drive for a national identity has to be ingrained and continuously reinforced throughout childhood – we have to instill a sense of pride and love for the national language and country," emphasized the linguist.

"Today, as we move forward into the 21st century, we are faced with the challenges of reinventing a national identity which is also engulfed in the era of globalization, and science and technology – when the importance of these three intertwined," she added.

During the talk, Professor Emeritus Datuk Dr. Nik Safiah also shared the history of the Malay Language, which dates as early as 7th century in Sumatera, Indonesia, and 14th century in Kuala Berang, Terengganu.

In between the two discoveries, she said, in the 13th century, Islam finally reached the shores of the Malacca Straits. Malay excellence and cultural centres began to sprout at the capitals of territories under the rule of Samudera Pasai (1300-1414), Sultanate of Aceh (1511-1650) and Johor-Riau (1650-1800).

The scholarly serial talks dubbed "Siri Bicara Cendekiawan Mulia UMP" is organized by the Association of Cendekiawan UMP in collaboration with the Office of Vice-Chancellor (PNC).

Discussing the theme 'Bahasa Melayu dan Pemerkasaan Identiti Nasional dalam Era Malaysia Baharu', or 'Promotion and Reinforcement of National Identity under the New Malaysia Era', the scholarly serial talk held at UMP on 11 October 2018 was moderated by Dr. Siti Hajar Binti Mohd. Shariff, the Head of Human Sciences Department of the Centre for Modern Languages & Human Sciences (CMLH).

The second speaker for the day, renowned Malay Language proponent and founder of Yayasan Budi, Tan Sri Dr. Rais Yatim emphasized the importance of the Malay Language in the tertiary learning objectives set by the Ministry of Education (MoE), local public institutions of higher learning, and the role of upholding the dignity of the Malay Language, employing it as a daily communication tool and applying the language in the workplace.

"In addition, the Malays themselves should take pride in speaking in Malay, and collectively, practice the language in their daily lives, including in their traditions, including traditional attires," Tan Sri Dr. Rais emphasized.

"What is practically alarming and worrisome nowadays, we no longer find books, technical manuals and printed materials in the Malay language," he said.

into Malay by Dewan Bahasa & Pustaka, for the purpose of teaching and learning," he lamented.

Tan Sri Dr. Rais raised his concerns that the Malay Language is seen lagging behind, in its application and trade and commerce.

"In fact, even roads and residential areas are no longer named using the Malay Language," he bemoaned.

Tan Sri Dr. Rais proposed that utilization of the Malay Language in communal interactions should be proper and should not be mixed up with other languages.

"A national identity is strictly linked to the national language, and henceforth, such national identity could not be compromised."

The 'Siri Bicara Cendekianan Mulia UMP' talks is a monthly programme showcasing in-depth discourse from within the country and from abroad.

These figures will speak on and dissect the current state of affairs of a particular theme, across all dimensions, for the benefits of those at UMP, specifically, and the surrounding communities, generally.

The scholarly serial talks is part and parcel of UMP's commitments to transform the university into an open space with various activities of mature debates as well as sane discussions.
